ABSTRACT

This guide, designed to assist groups interested in participating in the 1981 White House Conference on Aging, describes the community forum as an opportunity for local citizens to hold public discussions on issues of importance to older persons and to the general community. The handbook introduces readers to the Conference, outlines the design of proposed local, state, and regional Conference activities, and offers a "how to" guide for groups organizing community forums that addresses the topics of sponsorship, participants, forum size, time, and location as well as ideas for organizing, conducting, and reporting a forum. Themes for community forums are suggested and lists of potential sponsors are given. The next section describes publicity efforts for the forums through newspapers, radio, television, and public service announcements. A series of 11 questions are presented which suggest discussion ideas for community forums. The names and addresses of state agencies on aging and of area agencies within each state are also provided. (NRB)

Remarks of the President

When President Carter announced the appointment of the leadership of the 1981 White House Conference on Aging on December 10, 1979, he said:

In the last twenty years there have been two previous White House Conferences on Aging, and both of them, in effect, have transformed the thinking of Americans about those among us who have reached an age, potentially, of retirement, but who have so much to offer to our country in a rapidly increasing fashion. . . .

It is very important that we recognize the need for elderly people to have a maximum opportunity for self determination. Their lives have become ever more valuable with the passing years, because they have accumulated experience; after retirement, or at the age of retirement, they have, sometimes, time to contribute to their country; they have vivid insight into the problems and challenges of our time. They have a broad perspective, in having seen crises come and go. They are completely conversant with the elements that comprise American society. They have confidence in our country because they have seen us meet similar challenges in the past.

President Carter

Many elements of American societal life can be harnessed to provide a partnership with the aged people of our country. In academic circles; in business and labor; local, state and Federal agencies of government; in community programs, churches and other benevolent institutions: there is an opportunity for free interchange of advice and counsel, communication and common work, to realize the hopes and dreams of many Americans, regardless of age. . . .

Dr. Sadie Tanner Mossell Alexander, 82, Chairperson of the White House Conference on Aging, has been part of the progress made in our country in the finest possible way. She happens to be the first Black woman ever awarded an earned Ph.D. in this country, in economics; and she later achieved her Doctor of Law degree from the University of Pennsylvania. . . .

Dr. Alexander is the same age as my mother. They were both born in 1898. And I think the vivacious attitude that she has, and the full life that she lives, and the tremendous contribution that she will undoubtedly make in the future, is indicative of the need for all of us in this country never to consider any person, regardless of age, other than a tremendous potential asset for our country.

I know that my mother is as young as I am, or as she was, 35 or 40 years ago, or 50 years ago. And many people who are not as well known as Lillian Carter or Dr. Alexander have the same ability to contribute on a continuing basis to a better life for all Americans. There is no doubt in my mind that under her leadership the White House Conference on Aging will be not only successful and beneficial to others, but it will be exciting and enjoyable and stimulating, and inspirational as well.

Dear Friend:

I am pleased to invite your leadership and participation in the White House Conference on Aging Community Forums scheduled for Older Americans Month, May 1980.

This handbook, which we hope will be useful to you in organizing your Community Forum, has also been developed to introduce you to the Conference and to outline the design of the proposed local, state and regional Conference activities. The Community Forums are the first step in a series of grass-roots events, which will culminate in the National White House Conference on Aging to be conducted in Washington, D.C. during December 1981.

These Community Forums will provide local citizens, old and young, with the opportunity of open public discussion on issues of importance both to older persons and to the community at large. It is our hope that the forums will focus on two equally important objectives. First, your discussions should stimulate awareness of the White House Conference on Aging and educate the general public regarding the resources, talents and creativity of older persons. Second, the forums will provide a means of your personal involvement in the development of a meaningful White House Conference on Aging.

We are most interested to learn what happens at your Community Forum and we encourage you to send us your recommendations on national priority areas which may be incorporated in the National Conference agenda. If the White House Conference on Aging is to develop responsible recommendations for national policy and program initiatives, we need your input. Your role in the Community Forums is vital, and I urge you to begin planning at the earliest opportunity to assure a meaningful event.

Best wishes for a successful Community Forum. I know that your efforts will contribute significantly to Older Americans Month, to the future of older Americans everywhere, and to a thoughtful and productive White House Conference on Aging.

what is the White House Conference on Aging, 1981?

Introduction

During the twentieth century there have been about 35 national conferences carrying the aegis of the White House. This increasingly popular mechanism has allowed both the President and Congress to draw national attention to a wide range of subjects, aging being one. The 1981 White House Conference on Aging will be the third such conference on aging since the initial one in 1961.

This upcoming White House Conference provides the opportunity to confront both short-term and long-range issues of concern to an aging society and to obtain recommendations and direction for responsive public and societal actions.

The uniqueness of the 1981 White House Conference should not be ignored. A number of significant factors have triggered the planning for this important conference:

- The increase in the total number of elderly in America and the growing proportion they represent in the population as a whole.
- The projected continual increase in the size of the older population.
- The increased pool of knowledge available about why and how people age.
- The growth in private and public services for older people.
- The proportion of the Federal budget spent on older Americans.
- The increased awareness on the part of public policy makers that the older population is, while beset with a multitude of problems, also an important national resource.

Previous White House Conferences on Aging have been most productive in identifying gaps and stimulating governmental programs and policy initiatives. This has resulted in a steady expansion in both the number and complexity of social organizations concerned with aging. With a rapidly changing society and the presently projected demographic revolution, it is time to consider the redesign of our social institutions and arrangements in response to the sheer numbers of people and their longer life expectancy. Thus, while the 1981 White House Conference on Aging must address the many problems that confront present and future older Americans, there is also a great need for an innovative approach to maximize older Americans as current and future resources for this nation.

Leadership

In order to assure that the best resources are directed toward the 1981 White House Conference, thoughtful consideration has been given to its leadership, resulting in the appointment of highly qualified persons to the Advisory Committee and the Technical Committees.

An aging society not only impacts upon those who are over 55 years of age, but is of importance to all of society. Thus, the leadership for the Conference is made up of individuals representing a broad sector of society including economists, energy experts, media personnel, religious leaders, academia, labor and industry, consumers, voluntary sector, arts and humanities, professional/scientific areas, and government. HEW Secretary Harris has also been sensitive to the special impact of aging upon women and minorities and reflected this concern in the appointment of the committees' members.

Legislative background

The Conference derives from Title II, P.L. 95-478, "1981 White House Conference on Aging Act," which authorizes the President to call a White House Conference on Aging in 1981 "in order to develop recommendations for further research and action in the field of aging which will further the policies" set forth in nine substantive needs areas enumerated in Section 202 of the Act. In addition, the final report of the Conference is to include "a statement of a comprehensive coherent national policy on aging together with recommendations for the implementation of the policy." The nine policy areas suggested in the legislation are:

1. improvement of the economic well-being of older individuals;
2. increase in availability of comprehensive and quality health care for older individuals;
3. expansion of availability of appropriate housing with supportive services to promote increased independence for older individuals;
4. increase in the comprehensiveness and effectiveness of the social service delivery system for older individuals;
5. promotion of greater employment opportunities for middle-aged and older individuals;
6. a more comprehensive and responsive long-term care policy;
7. a national retirement policy that contributes to fulfillment, dignity, and satisfaction of retirement.
8. policies to overcome false stereotypes about aging and the process of aging;
9. a national policy with respect to biomedical and other appropriate research.

The legislation also specifies some means and processes by which the recommendations are to be developed or evolved. These include:

- Working jointly with states and their citizens.
- Placing emphasis upon the right and obligations of older individuals to free choice and self-help.
- Bringing together of government employees, professional and lay persons working in the field of aging, and representatives of the general public, including older individuals.
- Obtaining cooperation and assistance of other Federal departments.
- Rendering assistance to state units on aging, Area Agencies on Aging, and other appropriate organizations in organizing and conducting pre-Conference activities.
- Assuring broad participation of older individuals.

This, then, is your Conference—an opportunity to be heard. This opportunity begins in May 1980, Older Americans Month, with the encouragement of Community Forums organized by individuals or groups, to surface some of the issues which must be addressed.

Operational design

Phase I of the 1981 White House Conference will focus on local- and state-sponsored activities between May 1980 and May 1981. These activities will hopefully develop:

- an awareness of the upcoming 1981 Conference;
- provide a means for the development of issues and recommendations on a broad range

14

ACTION/RSVP, Colorado

of topics from a variety of concerned groups; and

- provide a means for selecting delegates to the National Conference.

The steps to achieve these objectives will include:

- Local Community Forums during May 1980, the traditional Older Americans Month.
- State White House Conferences between September 1980 and April 1981, in every state and territory around topic areas determined by the Advisory Committee, with each state reporting on the issues and recommendations covered at its conference.
- By May 1981, all the delegates to the National Conference should have been named.
- Separate "mini-conferences" to concentrate on specific issues that may not get the necessary attention during the regular process, e.g., special dilemma of older women, minority aged, etc.

Throughout, the advisory committee and technical committees will explore the issues around the topics identified in the legislation as well as additional areas. The program agenda for the National Conference and the roles and responsibilities for the entire conference process will gradually be clarified, and the Conference office will provide technical assistance to help groups link into the conference process.

Phase II of the 1981 White House Conference on Aging (June 1981- December 1981) will emphasize the involvement of the delegates and the dissemination of information to the delegates from the activities which occurred during Phase I.

During July and August 1981, at local community meetings, the delegates will hear the issues and recommend actions which they, as delegates, should bring to the National Conference from "grass root" individuals. During September 1981, there will be Regional Hearings for groups to report on their positions which have evolved around topic areas during Phase I activities and the mini-conferences and symposia.

Through this series of events, the delegates will be well-prepared for educated and serious decision-making at this national meeting, resulting in a comprehensive and coherent national policy on aging.

During the week of November 30- December 4, 1981, all the delegates will gather in Washington, D. C. for the full National Conference.

"how-to" guide for groups organizing White House Conference on Aging community forums

This guide is developed to assist groups who wish to participate in the 1981 White House Conference on Aging through conducting community forums during Older Americans Month, May 1980. While there will be other opportunities for involvement between now and the end of the Conference, persons at the local level are encouraged to become involved early through the White House Conference Community Forums during May 1980.

What is the purpose of a White House Conference Community Forum?

ACTION/RSVP, Montana

White House Conference Community Forums provide a means for the community to have public discussions around the implications of an aging society. Such discussions will develop an awareness of the current status of the elderly residents within a community as well as encourage the community to better prepare itself for the future when a greater percentage of its residents will be older Americans.

These Community Forums begin the White House Conference on Aging activities through discussions by the elderly and other interested members of the community around topics, many of which will continue to be explored over the next one and one-half years, ending with the National Conference meeting in Washington, D. C. at the end of 1981.

Who may sponsor White House Conference Community Forums?

Anyone interested in having Community Forums during May 1980 may initiate the planning. Existing community groups may want to sponsor forums or individuals with no formal group affiliation within the community can get a group together for a forum.

State and Area Agencies on Aging and national organizations have been invited by the White House Conference office to encourage their local affiliates to organize and conduct forums. Many of these organizations are planning to participate through their local chapters and to assist in providing materials to local organizers of the Community Forums.

Depending upon the size of a community and the interest of the residents, some communities will want to have a large number of forums while other communities having smaller populations will have only one forum during May 1980.

ACTION/RSVP, Indiana

ACTION/RSVP, Wyoming

Who should participate in the Community Forums?

The Community Forums should be open meetings which include anyone who desires to participate. All forums should have older Americans as participants, since the forums are part of Older Americans Month activities as well as the kick-off activity of the 1981 White House Conference on Aging.

While elderly persons should participate in each Community Forum, middle-aged persons and youth should also be encouraged to attend. A mixture of age groups will assure a sharing of thoughts about aging in America today and in decades to come. Community leaders, young persons, families, volunteers, and religious leaders may find the forum provides a means for increasing their awareness of the elderly and the contributions that elderly persons currently make or could make to the community.

How large should a Community Forum be?

A Community Forum could range in size from five people getting together to have a discussion, up to about thirty people forming a discussion group. Organizers may find that in some cases interest within the community calls for a number of discussion groups to be conducted simultaneously in order to keep the group size small enough to provide the opportunity for all to participate.

ACTION/RSVP, Pennsylvania

Where and when should White House Conference Community Forums be held?

The Community Forums should be held during May 1980 which is Older Americans Month, or prior to your state conference on aging. Forums can be held in private homes or apartments, in churches, community halls, senior centers, schools, nursing homes, club buildings, and in public buildings such as the city or county office building. Any place that is suitable for a group gathering could be utilized for holding a Community Forum, depending upon the number of participants expected, accessibility of the site for handicapped individuals and those needing transportation, and the availability of the space at the time.

A good idea is to conduct your forum through a radio or television talk program. Some stations will allow you to use their studio. This method of conducting a forum would allow a large number of people to observe, with an opportunity for call-in discussions from some other viewers and listeners.

ACTION/RSVP, Wyoming

ACTION/RSVP, Michigan

How do you go about organizing a White House Conference Community Forum?

ACTION/RSVP, West Virginia

Once you have decided you would like a forum in your community, you should begin talking with other persons to ascertain how much interest there is in your community and to identify what other groups or individuals are also planning to sponsor Community Forums. While it is possible for a number of groups within the same community to sponsor Community Forums, you will want to coordinate your plans to obtain the maximum publicity, a good mixture of participants, and a good coverage of topics to be discussed.

Some communities may want to have a central coordinating body which keeps informed of the plans of each separate group. Other communities may do this in an informal manner by just keeping in contact with one another. The important thing is if you are interested in your community having a Community Forum, don't assume someone else is planning to sponsor one. Go ahead and start talking about it and if you don't learn that others are planning forums, begin organizing one yourself.

You will want to have an organizing committee to work with you in developing the details to make sure your Community Forum is successful. Where possible, the organizing committee should be composed of individuals who have experience and knowledge in the field of aging, plus older Americans themselves and community people who have background in leadership and organizing community meetings.

The organizing committee will want to carry out the following tasks:

- Appoint a chairperson for the committee.
- Select a date, time, and place for the forum.
- Publicize the forum's purpose.
- Arrange for transportation for those needing it.
- Determine the theme of the forum if one is to be selected.
- Develop an agenda, allowing plenty of time for discussion.
- Identify speakers if presentations are desired.
- Arrange for any housekeeping that may need to be done before, during and after the meeting.
- Appoint a recorder for each discussion.

What actually happens at a Community Forum?

Much flexibility exists in developing the program agenda for a Community Forum. You may want to consider the following possibilities:

- Registration.
- Opening speech explaining the purpose of the forum, its relationship to Older Americans Month and the 1981 White House Conference on Aging, reading of the President's Proclamation for Older Americans Month, and explaining the plan for the 1981 White House Conference.
- Highlighting contributions made by selected local elderly persons to their community.
- A brief panel presentation on the topics you have chosen to emphasize through your Communiuty Forum.
- Participant discussion.
- Closing remarks.

A Community Forum could last all day or it could be scheduled for one or two hours. The length of time depends on the type of program agenda you develop. Forums extending beyond three hours would probably have to include lunch and beverage breaks.

American Association of Retired Persons

How will Community Forums be reported?

The White House Conference on Aging office is interested in knowing about the forums. Some of the national organizations have offered to receive the reports on the forums. If you are participating in the forums through the sponsorship of a national organization, you can receive copies of the report form from their national office. In addition, any group conducting a White House Conference Community Forum can receive a one-page reporting form from the local Area Agency on Aging or state unit on aging. Completed reports may be sent to either your sponsoring national organization or to your local Area Agency on Aging who will forward it to the state and national level. The White House Conference office will be working with these organizations to review the reports submitted, and will link the information obtained from the forums into the Conference process.

What are the suggested topics or themes for the Community Forums?

ACTION/RSVP, West Virginia

Community Forums can be held around any topic or topics of interest to the participants. The White House Conference on Aging is particularly interested in the forums highlighting the contributions that older persons make to their community. Other suggestions your organizing committee may want to consider are as follows:

- Productive and fulfilling roles for older Americans.
- Increased opportunities for employment for older Americans.
- Promoting independence and the dignity of older Americans.
- Assuring adequate incomes for older Americans.
- Participation by all minority elderly in the community.
- Improving the quality of life as well as extending life.
- Role of the church/synagogue in the lives of older Americans.
- Unique needs and resources of elderly women.
- Targeting of public services for those elderly in greatest need.
- Interaction of government, family, neighborhood, voluntary and private sector for older Americans.

Some national organizations may develop a theme which they will ask their local affiliates to adopt for their Community Forums. The White House Conference office supports that type of national effort through the forums.

How to publicize your Community Forum

Get the word out about your Community Forums.

Good publicity can help ensure a successful event. This means enlisting the support of the communications media in your area — radio, television and the printed press.

There are two ways the press can help you with your program — by inviting people to attend and by letting the public know what took place at the Community Forum.

Newspapers

Either way, you will need a well-written, short press release to present the major facts: you want people to know what is happening, when it will happen and that you want them to participate.

Also, add the name and phone number of a contact person who can give out more information.

When contacting the newspapers, remember the small weekly or monthly community press. They are excellent vehicles for local information and will often use photographs as well.

Radio and Television

Commercial broadcasters are obligated by the Federal Trade Commission to devote a certain amount of time to programs and spot announcements in the public interest.

Non-commercial stations, those in the public broadcasting system, are entirely in the public's service, so to speak, and may be more likely to air your information.

In addition to sending them your press release, try to slot guests on the television and radio talk shows. Choose a guest who is articulate and familiar with the issues to be aired during your Community Forum.

Public Service Announcements

Public Service Announcements are short (10 to 60 seconds) timed messages that are aired over the broadcast media without charge. For television, these are usually shown with slides, 35mm color transparencies.

Your local radio or television station may be of great assistance in helping you develop your PSA's.

Some stations may even lend you their studio for your public events. Ask about this. Holding your Community Forum right inside a television station immediately gives you greater exposure and, if open telephone lines are part of the format, permits for more people to participate.

Whatever you do, it is the message — we need new policies for the aging — that is more important than the medium.

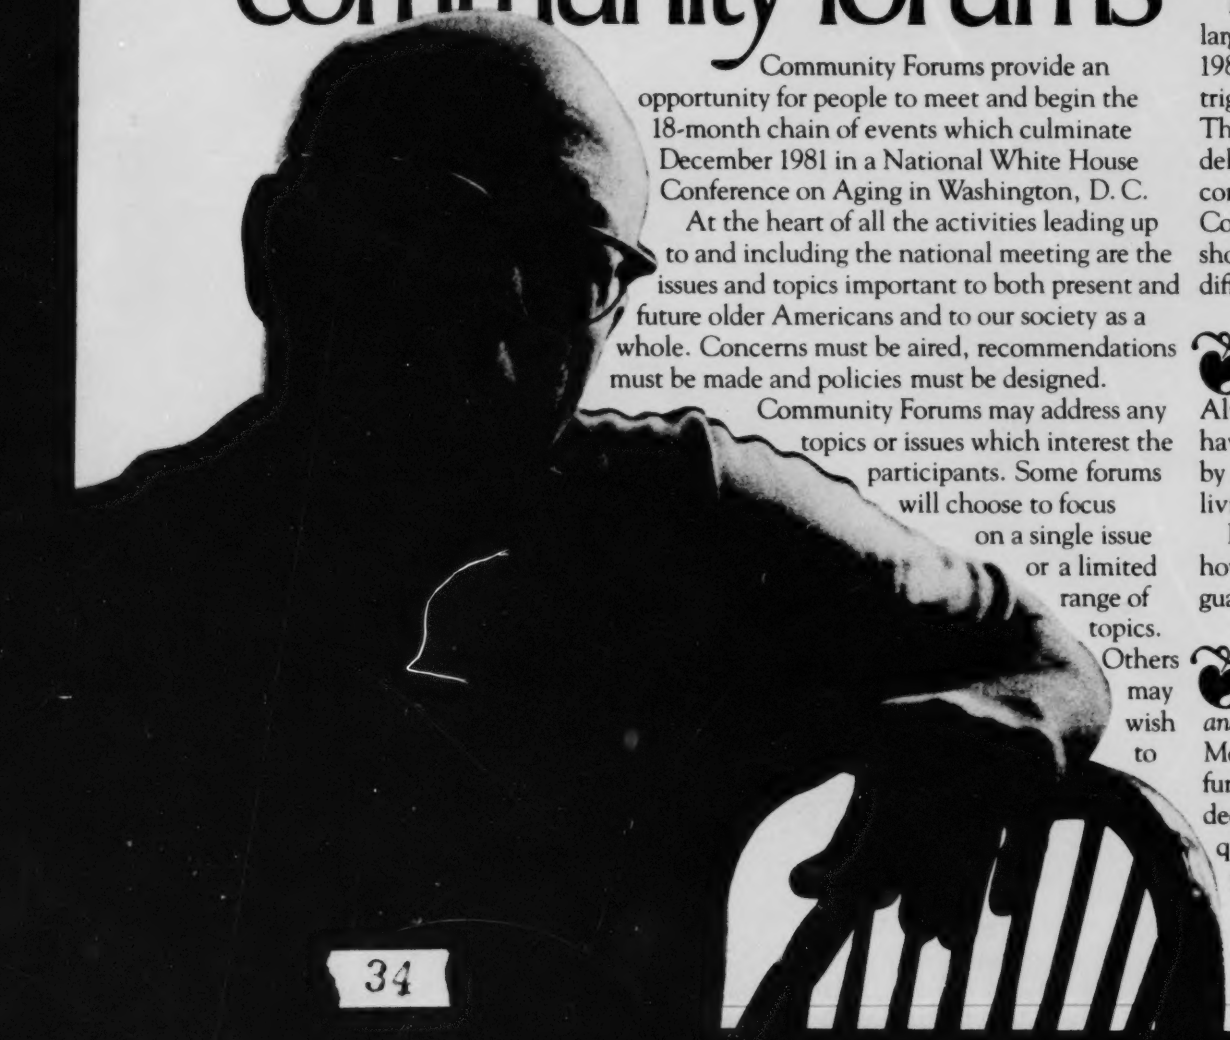
some discussion ideas for community forums



Community Forums provide an opportunity for people to meet and begin the 18-month chain of events which culminate December 1981 in a National White House Conference on Aging in Washington, D. C.

At the heart of all the activities leading up to and including the national meeting are the issues and topics important to both present and future older Americans and to our society as a whole. Concerns must be aired, recommendations must be made and policies must be designed.

Community Forums may address any topics or issues which interest the participants. Some forums will choose to focus on a single issue or a limited range of topics. Others may wish to discuss a whole range of subjects. Affiliates of national organizations may be asked to organize their discussions around a prescribed theme. What these topics will ultimately be, however, and what recommendations will emanate from the process cannot be determined or set in advance. They will be dictated throughout by all those who choose to participate in the process.

Below are a series of questions, drawn largely from the legislation that authorized the 1981 White House Conference on Aging, to trigger thoughtful planning and discussion. They are in no way meant to influence the deliberations nor do they presume to cover the complete array of topics. Participants in the Community Forums and subsequent events should feel free to add, change or frame different and additional issues for discussion.

How can we as a nation provide economic security for all older Americans?

Although a large majority of older Americans have adequate incomes, they are threatened by the continuous increases in the cost of living including food, housing and energy.

In an era of diminishing national resources, how do we counter the erosion of inflation and guarantee adequate retirement income for all?

How can we safeguard the health of aging Americans and reduce the physical, mental and economic costs of ill health?

Most Americans remain relatively healthy and function well into old age. However, there is a declared need to make comprehensive and quality health care more available to older persons and a need for a stronger orientation towards preventive care.

How can older Americans be assured of a satisfactory living environment, including suitable housing and the supports needed for an independent life?
The rising cost of housing and home maintenance, the shortage of appropriate, affordable and supportive living arrangements, the lack of accessible or affordable transportation and urban crime all combine to present difficulties to many older persons.

In rural areas, the physical deterioration of much existing housing and the lack of public transportation also present problems to many older persons.

What needs to be done to create a supportive environment and to enhance the satisfactions and opportunities of older people?

How can we assure an adequate share of resources and attention to redress the imbalances which still persist among minority aged who suffer multiple jeopardies?
Older minority persons, including Native Americans, Asian-Americans, Hispanics, and Blacks, are more likely to be poor, and more likely to be discriminated against, than older whites. Older Blacks, for example, are more than twice as likely to be poor as are older whites.

In what way can we resolve the social imbalances of elderly women?
A substantial number of older persons are poor or near the poverty levels. Disproportionately represented among them are elderly women.

Women live on an average eight years longer than men, yet they have less economic support for their old age. Their shorter and often interrupted work histories plus their generally lower salaries lead to smaller pensions in retirement. Survivor benefits from their deceased spouses are usually reduced.

Older women are also more likely to be living alone and may be isolated.

How can retired Americans develop and pursue increasingly productive and fulfilling roles in their later years?
There is a great need to develop a national retirement policy that contributes to the fulfillment, dignity and satisfaction of the retirement years.

Retired Americans have more untapped free time than any other age group. Together, they constitute a repository of talent, experience and skill which our society has underutilized. Efforts to tap this resource have barely begun. Creation of new outlets and opportunities for the experience of older Americans may require innovative collaborations of private industry, government and the voluntary sector.

How can we assure productive and rewarding employment for those older Americans who wish to work?
Middle-aged and older workers tend to experience more frequent and longer periods of unemployment than younger workers. Age discrimination, illegal but still prevalent, may cause older workers to receive less on-the-job opportunity than younger workers. Such underutilization of the potential of older workers represents not only a loss to them, but to the larger society as a whole.

What social policies and services are needed to strengthen the resources of the increasing number of families with two generations of elderly persons?
With the rapid growth of the elderly population and with most of the increase among those over 75, more people are expected to live into their 80s and 90s and more families will have two generations of elderly persons in the single family unit.

What plans are needed to support those persons caught between the expectations of their adult children, their own retirement, and the demands of dependent aged parents?

How can we direct adequate resources to support those elderly persons who are particularly vulnerable and at risk?
There is a great need for a more comprehensive longterm care policy responsive to the needs of older persons and their families. The chronically ill, the very old, and the very poor have special problems which may require special efforts.

ACTION/SCP, Florida

While Medicare and Medicaid have gone far to reduce the financial burdens of catastrophic care, the economic and organizational problems of providing quality and dignified longterm care as well as alternatives to institutionalization remain.

What should be the place of the religious community in ministering to the needs of the elderly?
Religious leaders and organizations have long been involved in social service and charitable activities to the elderly in their communities. Because of the place religious institutions occupy in the local community and in the lives of many Americans, the religious sector has a special potential for establishing links across generations, for taking a lead in helping the most needy and ill and for helping individuals and families cope with suffering and death.

What needs to be done with respect to increasing, coordinating and expediting biomedical and other research directed at determining the causes of aging?
Most people will agree that it is meaningless to expand the lifespan of the older adult without simultaneously extending the good health and functioning ability of the individual into those added years.

These are just some of the issues which you may wish to discuss at Community Forums during Older Americans Month. Organizers and participants should feel free to ignore the issues sketched above or to substitute or add topics which they feel to be of greater interest or importance.

Letter of Invitation to the
1981 White House Conference on Aging

Arthur Flemming and Jerome Waldie with Dr. Sadie T. M. Alexander

Dear Colleague:

As the 1981 Chairperson for the White House Conference on Aging, I welcome this opportunity to encourage you to participate in the activities of the next one and one-half years. These activities have been carefully planned to provide individuals and local groups the means to express their concerns and desires for the future of older Americans. Beginning with the participation in the Community Forums this May and continuing through the state conferences, mini-conferences, and delegate-sponsored hearings, you will be able to inform the Conference organizers of the important issues and of your recommendations. Since only a limited number of persons will be able to attend the National Conference in Washington, D. C. at the end of 1981, it is extremely important that you take advantage of the pre-Conference activities to make yourself heard.

The 1981 White House Conference on Aging is a conference for all America. It is an opportunity for all of us to shape future policy for an aging society. I encourage you to become involved in this important process, beginning with the Community Forums, and I urge you to remain involved throughout the Conference developments; attend the meetings, help shape the issues, participate in the delegate selection. We at the Conference office will be happy to provide any assistance we can. The Advisory Committee and the Conference Staff are also eager to learn about the results of your local activities. By keeping us informed, we will be able to provide the linkage into the overall conference process.

I look forward to working with you on the 1981 White House Conference on Aging. With your input, we can look forward to a high-quality, productive Conference that truly reflects the interest and concerns of the American people.

Sincerely,

Sadie T.M. Alexander
